Well, baseball is back...kind of...sort of...I guess. I mean, it's just not quite the same with umpires wearing masks under their masks and the Phanatic playfully plying his antics on cardboard cutouts of fans in the seats. Remember our pre-corona world when we could cheer or jeer players in person? I remember some baseball of my youth and one game in particular for its jeers and cheers. I was in the midst of my grade school career and on one of our school intramural teams. I was the catcher. I wasn't exactly a slugger and the outfield generally moved in when I was at bat. This particular game was rather uneventful for the most part. It was late in the game and we were down by one. It was "do or die" time. We had a man on base with one out. The batter after me had glasses so thick that we called him "Batman" and it wasn't because he was like a crime-fighting superhero. His hearing was great though. As I said, I wasn't exactly a slugger. I could hear the cheers and then the jeers as I took a hard swing at the first pitch and caught air. Take your time; watch the ball, barked the coach. The next pitch was high and way outside as the pitcher tried to get fancy. The runner advanced as their catcher struggled to find the ball. I got him, I thought. The next pitch I tipped foul. Then, he decided to throw it straight and hard. Silly boy! I tagged it. It was a line drive into the outfield skipping, hopping, and bouncing over every divot and tuft of grass. Their centerfielder, Booger, distracted while picking his nose, watched the ball skip by. Withdrawing his digit from his nasal cavity and wiping it on his jersey, he gave chase to the still bouncing ball. He fumbled it once and then fumbled it twice getting off a poor throw to the short stop that came tearing out toward him. Before throwing, short decided to berate his nose-picking teammate with some choice, unprintable words. Their coach was absolutely livid. His face was bright red as he screamed. I thought that his head might explode right there. Boom! While all this was going on, I was doing my thing. Our base runner was already home before I even got to first. In fact, I think he had already drunk a soda and finished a pretzel having put mustard on it first. As I was never really a slugger; nor was I a sprinter. I was more the distance runner...slow and steady. I waddled along like I was carrying two ten pound dumbbells. I guess it was my build. As a kid, I was always "husky." That was my size for clothing and pants. How embarrassing is that? "Husky" didn't have anything to do with those beautiful, strong dogs that can brave winter's worst. It was a term that meant "well, not quite fat, but certainly not thin." One was just "husky." By the way, it was only boys that were "husky." I don't know what animal they used to describe girls of such build (and there were a few in my class). I could now hear my coach screaming along with my teammates. It was one simple word: Ruuuuun! It was then that I heard the voice of my own father who was present at the game. A rather quiet man who would never use untoward language especially at a Catholic elementary school intramural baseball game, he stood up and screamed at his husky offspring, Move your !!! Not one other parent objected. No one was offended. All concurred. I got the message and kicked it up to full tugboat speed. Rounding second, short flubbed his throw having almost gotten into a fight right there on the field with his center. He tossed to two and then two would make a throw to the plate. The tug was on its way like a loose barge in a storm about to slam into a Schuylkill bridge abutment. Two made his throw. I was almost there. Time stood still for just a second. Two's throw was way over their catcher's head and I ran through home, knocked over the catcher and crashed into the fence that was the backstop. The cheers were deafening. My father was ecstatic. My teammates rushed me and knocked me to the ground. You don't lift the "husky" kid. We would win that game and there would be ice cream for everyone. Jeers and cheers - it's all part of the game. I think the same is true for that most important "game" - the one concerning our Faith. Sometimes I picture God like a coach screaming as we waddle around the bases of life and sometimes I picture Him like my own father yelling, Move your ! It all has to do with the cheers that come in the end after we've hit that run that wins the game and crossed the plate of our heavenly home. Then there will be ice cream for all - even Booger and Batman!

Peace!

Fr. Wilson
